How to build a startup within 30 days -

Pro tip: In the first 30 days, your goal is to get your first 10 customers.

Nothing else matters.

Do only those tasks which are absolutely necessary for getting you 10 paid customers.

Ruthlessly eliminate everything else.

Let's say you're building a Calendly clone.

You'll need

- a website for getting customers.

- a functioning product.

- a customer acquisition strategy.

- a launch strategy

- Post a job on Dribbble & hire a UI-UX designer to design the interface of your app.

- Task here is to design an end-to-end workflow of the app.

While your designs arrive, you'll vet developers who can build the app on no-code using Bubble

- Go to Fiverr, & find Bubble developers with 10+ projects. Pay for the experience.

- Set up calls to figure out their budget. Don't skimp on the cost, pay what they're worth

You have a website, your designs are getting baked and you have 2-3 prospective developers that you will finalize at the start of week 2.

Week 2 and 3 - Build a 500-person email list

And then direct thousands of people to your website so you can capture emails.

Let me show you 5 strategies to find these 500 customers from social media.

1. Follow your competitors' customers and DM them for advice. People love giving advice, but to give you advice they'd have to sign up. Sneaky.

To do this make a database of your competitors and the social channels where they are most popular.

Table

Competitors

Aa Name	Social Presence	Audience
Calendly	Twitter, Instagram, LinkedIn	10K+
Competitor 2	Twitter, Instagram, Hacker News, Quora	10K+
Competitor 3	Hacker News, Product Hunt, Twitter	5K+
Competitor 4	Hacker News, Quora, Product Hunt, Instagram, Twitter	1-5K
Competitor 5	Instagram, Hacker News, Product Hunt	10K+

Follow their thousands of followers and send them this DM.

Ask them for advice on shaping the product.

Calendly has 20K followers

Assume 2,000 of them are their customers

Maybe 3% of those people will sign up

That's 60 users. BOOM!

You can repeat this with all your competitors. Send thousands of DMs to get 100s of sign-ups.

2. Find negative comments about your competitor on socialmention.com and reply to each one of those complaints asking them to try your product.

3. Build a Twitter bot that replies with a meme on every tweet where your competitors are mentioned.

To create the bot, follow the instructions here, it's pretty simple - ealpython.com/twitter-bot-py...

4. Target your competitors' followers and tell them your product is better.

My friend @AKASpencerScott tried this and it totally works.

5. Partner with Influencers and give them 100% commission

Research and make a list of influencers who talk about office culture, remote teams, no-code tools, work-from-home, etc.

Send them a hyper-personalized email. Take a picture holding a whiteboard (or their product) with their name

Sounds crazy, but that's why it works. If somebody sent you an email holding a whiteboard with your name on it, would you not reply?

c. Give them a 100% commission on any sale they bring. They keep revenue for month 1, if your product is any good, some users will be retained, and you'll keep the revenue from month 2 onwards.

The traffic from all these sources will come to your website.

Your app is ready. The designer was late, and the dev didn't exactly match the design, but hey, you have a MVP.

You also have an email list with 500+ sign-ups and some paying customers.

Unless there are major problems with your app, don't wait to test out the bugs in your app, launch it and use the pressure of losing customers to fix bugs faster.
